The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) has not published regulations dealing specifically with confined spaces found in the construction industry. The OSHA confined-space standard, 29 CFR 1910.146, is written for general industry and states that it is not applicable to construction. However, the construction standard relating to safety training and education (29 CFR 1926.21) places an affirmative duty on the employer to train employees who enter confined or enclosed spaces ...
