~~Language structure: variation and change~~ Variation is a prominent ingredient of language as it presents itself to us. Languages differ from each other in various respects, e.g., in their sentence structure (syntax), word structure (morphology), sound structure (phonology) and vocabulary (lexicon).

~~Language Variation and Change (LANG VAR CHANGE)~~

Variation is a characteristic of language: there is more than one way of saying the same thing. Speakers may vary pronunciation, word choice, or morphology and syntax. But while the diversity of variation is great, there seem to be boundaries on variation – speakers do not generally make drastic alterations in sentence word order or use novel sounds that are completely foreign to the language being spoken. ~~Variation (linguistics) - Wikipedia~~

The term linguistic variation (or simply variation) refers to regional, social, or contextual differences in the ways that a particular language is used. Variation between languages, dialects, and speakers is known as interspeaker variation. Variation within the language of a single speaker is called intraspeaker variation.

This course explores the related processes of language variation and language change in the context of French throughout the world, from both synchronic and diachronic standpoints. Students should have a good prior knowledge of Linguistics and of the French language, and ideally will have read Fr2 ' Structures and Varieties of French ' at Part IB.

It makes sense to study these phenomena together because they are intimately related: language change is the basic source of language variation. So studying language change can help us to understand variation, and the nature of linguistic variation provides evidence as to how language changes. Both illuminate the nature of grammar.
